

A member variable might depend on another variable in order to know what its value should be. It is possible to declare a member variable using a previously declared member variable.

Since members of different types will need different amounts of memory, the structure will add a buffer in order to keep the members equally spaced in memory. Changing the order of the members will change the amount of memory that needs to be allocated to the structure.